

The bell may have rung and the sun may be hot, but the learning hasn't stopped at Douglas High School! This year, SHS will offer a variety of classes as part of a new summer learning program.

"We've added a summer learning program to help the focus on students during the summer," said Steve Doreilly, SHS superintendent. "We are providing an option for students in the area to keep their minds focused and help give them a head start on the next school year."

Classes that will be offered at SHS are: Christian ministry, Christian leadership, local geography, computer applications, library, career arts, reading and independent research. All classes will meet on Thursdays and Fridays from 9 a.m. until 2 p.m. beginning on June 3 until June 29. The SHS address will provide lunch. Students may enroll in one course and do not have to be current SHS students to enroll. Registration is open to students in the north grade and up, but class size is limited so students are encouraged to enroll early.
